TEACHERS GONE 2.0 TEACHING VERY YOUNG LEARNERS

ESCOBAR
JUNE 9TH

TEACHERS GONE 2.0

Delivering student-centred classes, where students become the main protagonists of their learning processes, is most teachers' ambition. For various, different reasons that goal is unattainable on occasions. Social Networks come to our rescue providing a familiar environment for students to communicate naturally, freely and authentically. If we take the leap and implement them, we might discover nothing creates a student-centred environment like a Facebook or Whatsapp group where students have the freedom of posting their thoughts in a medium they control and are completely acquainted with. In this workshop we aim to explore the nature of Social Networks, the different sites there are available, the benefits that may be reaped from their conscientious use, how to protect teachers' private lives and a variety of classroom applicable activities.

TEACHING VERY YOUNG LEARNERS

One may feel that teaching very young learners is a bit intimidating or daunting, or both for that matter. Well, it surely doesn't need to be! This workshop will seek to inspire and encourage you to take an active role in the classroom while exploring very young learners' learning process and what we need to bear in mind when designing our lessons. By analyzing the learning features of very young learners, we will understand the importance of songs, games, tasks suitable for young kids and story telling. Teaching very young children is no laughing matter but that doesn't mean we cannot share a few laughs while working on all of these teaching issues
